WEAR IT WELL

Keeping out the weather has become an art form with MACKINTOSH's women's collection. Almost 200 years of experience producing high-quality waterproofs has been paired with an eye for contemporary design and cutting-edge technology to ensure the iconic British brand continues to evolve while staying true to its origins. Equally adept at taking on mountain slopes or city streets, MACKINTOSH's luxury outerwear collection is an irresistible option.

Muirkirk: Contemporary classic

What makes a trench coat a trench coat? The Muirkirk comes complete with all the quintessential features that define the original wardrobe classic: epaulettes, gun patches, cuff straps and a belt with a leather buckle. Its rainproof, cotton-twill finish makes it as practical as it is good-looking.

MACKINTOSH

Kilmany: Urban update

A modern take on a classic MACKINTOSH shape, the Kilmany features contemporary additions that include slanted flap pockets and reverse cuff straps. These sculptural touches make it perfect for everyday use and ensure you look sharp in the boardroom or at the bar – not to mention the great outdoors.

Banton: Sophisticated silhouette

Made from rubberised fabric – the game-changing waterproof material hit upon by Charles Macintosh in 1823 – the Banton is also MACKINTOSH's bestselling ladies raincoat. Twinning functionality with style, the single-breasted, handmade jacket features a subtle A-line shape for a sleeker silhouette. The perfect all-rounder.

A woman with short brown hair and glasses is wearing a vibrant orange raincoat. She is holding a black folder with a white label that says 'Mackintosh'. She is standing in front of a shop window that displays various items, including a blue and white patterned vase and a lamp. The scene is set outdoors with green bushes in the foreground.

Banton: Elegant effort

Add verve to your workwear without sacrificing high performance. As with all MACKINTOSH products, the Banton's glued and taped seams – created by artisans with three-year apprenticeships behind them – will keep the elements at bay, while a punchy orange colourway provides a vibrant twist on a classic.
